Structured Reflection is a process that can catalyze transformative learning by employing intentionally designed exercises, activities, or assignments that can help students (and others) make connections and comparisons between (a) assumptions held and experiences encountered, (b) assumptions held and theories/concepts known, or (c) experiences encountered and theories/concepts known.