This information is taken from the results of a survey of the graduates of the Class of 2012 conducted from June through December 2012 by the Center for Career and Professional Development. As of Monday, December 17, 2012, the CCPD had first-destination data on 84 percent (260/308) of the graduating class. The purpose of the survey is to compile graduates’ first destinations after graduation. Data includes information reported directly by graduates in response to the Life After K survey or found by the CCPD staff through one-on-one conversations and internet research. Since graduates had the option of checking off more than one category at a time—for example, a student who has secured full-time employment but is also seeking something different—it is possible that not all categories add up to 100%.
