Implications of Course Withdrawal

The responsibility for understanding the implications of underloading for a term or withdrawing from a course ultimately falls on the student. This information is intended to assist you in making a good decision.

International students are responsible for maintaining their own visa status while in the U.S., which includes enrollment in at least 2.4 units per term.

Generally, all students should discuss the choice to withdraw with an advisor or the Registrar to make sure they understand how this withdrawal may or may not impact their opportunity to graduate on time or meet any other academic conditions.

Students withdrawing below two full-time courses need permission from the Dean of Students.

Students receiving any form of financial aid should review the College’s policy on Financial Aid Satisfactory Academic Progress. If clarification of the policy is required, speak with a representative of the Financial Aid Office.

Also, if you are a student-athlete, discuss this choice with your coach to be sure you will continue to be eligible to participate.

Some instances that require special consideration:

1. Students who are on “probation” for Financial Aid Satisfactory Academic Progress.

2. Students who are on probation for Financial Aid Satisfactory Academic Progress must complete 3 full unit courses; therefore, underloading, dropping, or withdrawing from a course at any time in the quarter will result in cancellation of their financial aid eligibility for the next quarter. Students who are placed on financial aid probation are notified by letter and email from staff in the Financial Aid Office. If you have any uncertainty about your financial aid status, it is best to meet with a financial aid staff person to discuss your status.

3. Student on Academic Probation of any kind.

Speak to Lesley Clinard, Director of Advising, or your advisor before withdrawing.
